VISITS WITH UNCLE BEN

Fall flowers. IN EVERY field and along roadsides, for miles, are groups of flowers in various shades of blue, purple, and white. They are the blue-eyed beauties, and their graceful heads in the billowy breezes. They are so common we fail to notice them, and instead of placing the daisies in our flower gardens, we cultivate the golden glow which is so prettier and does not please me as much, although I grow them both. A great bed of Susans will add much to the appearance of your yard when many of the midsummer flowers have withered and gone. Plant them in clumps by themselves with no other flower except as a back or foreground, and see how bright and sunny they will make their look. Never mind if the stalks do break when you transplant them in the fall. They will spring up from the roots in the spring and that is what you are planting for now, anyhow—the Spring. Put your perennials in one great bed with the hollyhocks in the rear. Then grade down with pinks, wild phlox, calliopsis, and the like. The result will be a bank of flowers, the blooms of which will show against the background of the taller plant behind. Now, too, is a fine time to mark your dahlias. Some are pink, others are variegated and still others deep red. On a wooden label write with ink or indelible pencil, the color of each plant. Attach these markers to the plant, and this fall transfer the bulbs to baskets correspondingly marked. Next year you can better arrange your dahlias as to colors and display.

Opportunity. One way to meet a problem is head on. In New York city when a man comes home at night with a package, he should read the sign on the flat that says: "All packages must be delivered by the rear door." But the trouble with a man who has been down town is that he cannot always read.

A prominent ornithologist having arrived at the conclusion that the song of the bird was originally a cry of alarm, a Texas publisher wants to know what the song of the tomcat used to be. Maybe it hurt him and he wanted to get it out of his system, like some embryo prima donnas, we have known.

As long as a bargain hunter wastes only time, hubby will not complain. It is when she comes home cross and warm and admits that she just doesn't know where that $20-bill went to that hub. grows seriously silent as he munches the picked-up dinner and mentally wrestles with the two ends that won't meet.

Silvery Tongued. A man who lets his money talk for him sometimes becomes famous as an orator.

Canine News. Somehow a dog always picks out a fellow who never amounts to much and makes a special friend of him.

UNTIL THE WINTER

THE SLEEVELESS COAT IS SURE TO HOLD ITS OWN.

Fashion is Too Pretty and Convenient to Be Lightly Put Away—Illustration Shows One of the Latest Styles.

Sleeveless coats continue to hold their popularity for evening wear and probably will do so until the autumn is past and heavier wraps are needed. The sleeveless coat is not only most practicable, but is most becoming, and even the most elaborate style of sleeves is apt to look clumsy in comparison with the frock sleeve peeping out from the armhole of a sleeveless coat.

In the illustration is shown a most fascinating evening garment suitable either for maid or matron and possessing a skeletonized construction for which any woman should be grateful.

Sleeveless Coat Trimmed with Fillet Lace.

In this day of attenuated outlines, the model is suitable for satin, silk, chiffon net or broadcloth. If any of the light weight fabrics are used they are lined with some degree of substantiality, for the model is not one to look well if too flimsily carried out. Satin, with a soft silk lining; silk, with soft satin lining, are suitable. The illustrated garment is of white cloth lined with silk of the thinnest and softest quality and the most exquisite pattern of La France roses on a white ground. The coat is trimmed with bands of fillet applique, which is laid over a lining of pink chiffon. This coat if worn with white, pink, pale gray, pale green or pale blue evening frocks of a rather simple order is really most attractive, the touch of pink in the coat being effectively carried out by the large pink rose in the collar. Very pale green coats lined with white and with white trimmings are most effective and most useful made along these lines. The model is one in fact which suggests a garment to be worn with a number of costumes and should be carried out in comparatively conventional color combinations and in line rather than magnificent materials. It is altogether too conventional to call for unique color schemes or to do honor to magnificent fabrics.

The High Ruching. The new platings and frills at the top of boned stocks are growing higher or lower. There seems no limit to what can be done in the height of the collar and the size of the hat.

Very few faces can stand as much ruching as the fashion prescribes, but these are the very faces that will wear it.

While the small, plaited frill is pretty, the extra large one is not. Remember always to have the stock very high if you wear one of these ruchings. Nothing is uglier than the tight stock that is an inch too low, with the plating that droops over its edges.

One-Piece Velvet Gowns. The style for morning frocks has appeared in velvet frocks for indoor wear. It is called a one-piece frock, but it is really cut in two pieces and put together at the waist line.

This seam is hidden by a belt of the material or of soft satin. The slip is then buttoned down from bust to hem straight down the left side. The buttons are covered with satin to match the color of the velvet.

The yoke and long, tight sleeves are of lace or net. Broadcloth the Fashionable Wear. Broadcloth will be the fashionable fabric of the coming season, and the maid or matron who is really recheche must number among her winter wardrobe a frock of this soft material in any of the following shades: Taupe, a foggy gray; prairie, a vivid green; marmotte, a suggestion of London smoke; maroc, a golden brown; mouquette, a new cadet blue; patachore, Marguerite, wisteria and peacock.

Raise Child's Chair. Children who are too large for the regular tea chairs often find that the regular dining-room chairs are much too low. When this is the case a simple way to make the chair a trifle higher is to screw into the bottom of each leg one of the ordinary door bumpers. The bumpers will not be noticeable and can be easily removed when the child has outgrown them.

Very Careful Ammunition. An army officer now in South Africa tells an odd tale of the Sikh war in India. Lalla Moolraj was besieged by the British in Multan and put up a stubborn defense. One day some of his men came across a stock of canned provisions, left by the former British occupants, and which were then quite a novelty. Lalla supposed that the cans contained explosives of some kind and ordered them to be fired at the besiegers. So for one whole day the British army was bombarded with showers of kippered herring, Yarmouth bloaters, corned beef, and condensed milk.
